

Summon

Still haven't found what you're looking for?

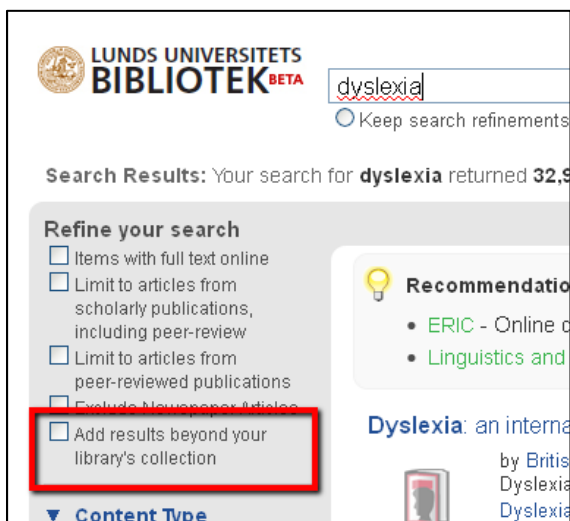

If you can't find what you're looking for in Summon (either because you're getting too few hits or too many irrelevant hits) it might be a good idea to do your search in subject database instead. Summon recommends relevant databases based on your search. You'll find the recommendations on top of the results page.

The screenshot shows the Summon search interface for 'dyslexia'. The search bar contains 'dyslexia' and the results count is 32,903. A 'Refine your search' section on the left includes several checkboxes, with an arrow pointing to the 'Add results beyond your library's collection' option. A 'Recommendation' box on the right suggests specialized collections like ERIC and Linguistics and Language Behavior Abstracts. Below the recommendations, there is a link for 'Dyslexia: an international journal of research and practice'.

For a complete list of the databases Lund University provides access to, please refer to <http://www.lub.lu.se/index.php?id=650>

You can also choose to expand your search in Summon to also include material that we do not have access to at Lund university by clicking the checkbox "Add results beyond your library's collection" in the top left corner.

This close-up screenshot focuses on the 'Refine your search' section. The checkbox 'Add results beyond your library's collection' is highlighted with a red box. Other visible options include 'Items with full text online', 'Limit to articles from scholarly publications, including peer-review', and 'Limit to articles from peer-reviewed publications'.
